Each of us have different ideas. There are those who consign life's problems as belonging to the realm of the abstract, reasoning that we cannot truly prepare for them anyway -- so be it as it may. There are those, on the opposite end of the spectrum, who seem to do everything possible to prepare for problems when they come, consuming an overwhelming amount of time and resources to make bulletproof plans that often fail. It is true that one can never really expect when a problem will come, and it is also true that there is no single answer to all problems we might face. After all, so many people are trying to solve things daily that if there was a single formula, it would already have been found. However, there is a structure. There is a certain road that we can follow that cannot show us the...
